Balyna House – A Brief History

Balyna House lies to the south of Moyvalley bridge over the Grand Canal, about halfway between Enfield and Kinnegad on the main Dublin – Galway road. The house lies in the centre of the estates 500 acres. Balyna Estate was granted in 1574 by Queen Elizabeth I to the O'Moore family because they had lost their land in Laois and were reinstated in Balyna.

Major Ambrose O'Ferrall married Letitia More in 1796. Their eldest son Richard More O'Ferrall was born in 1797. He is reputed for having been responsible for the erection of the Celtic cross which now stands to the rear of the house. It is said (although this cannot be verified) that this Cross, along with another was transported from Europe, the two being encased in wooden crates and towed behind the ship on a barge. Legend has it that one was lost at sea, but its twin survives to this day. The first real record of any house dates was from 1815 when Ambrose built a large mansion. That Georgian house was burned down and replaced in the 1880's by the present Italianate mansion.

The estate was a refuge for bishops and priests for centuries and Dr. Forstall, Bishop of Kildare, ordained priests here in the year 1678 – 1680. For this loyalty, the family was granted Papal permission to build a private Chapel on the estate (located to the rear of the house) and up to approximately 1914 Sunday Mass was offered. It was only used intermittently after that, with the last occasion being in the summer of 1959.

MOYVALLEY

HOTEL & GOLF RESORT

The estate remained in the More O'Ferrall family until May 1960 when it was sold to the Bewley family (of Café fame). The wonderful milk and cream in the Cafes came from the pedigree Jersey herd at Balyna, In 1984 the estate was sold to Justin Keating; it was sold again in 1990-1991 to George Grant.

The Resort was developed by the Jackson Family in 2007.

In 2014 the late Oliver Brady bought the Resort with his business partner Rita Shah (Shabra Plastics) and Jane Tripipatkul and her son Mark McCarthy who are based in London.
